

ABSTRACT

A method for providing streaming media data over coupled public/private and highly trafficked computer networks is described. By distributing media servers and aggregating media data at strategic locations, a streaming data subscription services are enabled that offer desktop video and other media with a quality of service exceeding what is presently available with provider-user data transfers directly over the public Internet.